

Tom Harley, Managing Director of Dragoman Pty. Ltd. (a country and political risk advisory firm), is a political scientist with an economics and finance background. He founded Dragoman in 2009.

From 2008 until its demerger, Mr. Harley was non-executive Chairman of Dow Chemical (Australia) and Senior Advisor to The Dow Chemical Company's Executive Leadership Team globally.

Previously, he was President of Corporate Development at BHP, where he designed and implemented BHP's worldwide political risk analysis methodology and developed strategies in countries where BHP wanted to do business – including some very challenging African and Asian countries.

Mr. Harley was also head of Mergers and Acquisitions for BHP's Petroleum Group. Prior to his work in petroleum, he was involved in BHP's financial restructuring and funding in BHP's Corporate Treasury.

He is Chairman of the Australia Saudi Business Council, a Director of the Colonial Foundation, and Chair of the Edward Wilson Trust.

Mr. Harley has previously served in a number of non-business roles as Chairman of the Australian Heritage Council, President of the Victorian Arts Centre and Chairman of the Menzies Research Centre. Most recently, he became a member of the inaugural Advisory Board of the Liveris Academy for Innovation and Leadership at The University of Queensland.
